

PadNavigator® 2.0

SELECTION GUIDE

Using this Selection Guide

Over 5 million Australians – 1 in 4 people aged 15 years or over – experience bladder or bowel control problems.¹ Many types of incontinence exist and there are a variety of options available to treat and/or manage urinary and faecal incontinence.

A continence assessment conducted by a continence advisor or urologist will help identify the most appropriate continence management plan for an individual.

If a disposable absorbent continence product is recommended, navigating the many styles, capacities, sizes and brand names can be both time-consuming and frustrating.

The BrightSky Australia PadNavigator® 2.0 helps to solve this problem through 4 easy steps which allow you to identify the products that best meet the capacity and size requirements of the person. The BrightSky Australia PadNavigator® 2.0 is used in conjunction with this BrightSky Australia Selection Guide.

CONTINENCE PAD CAPACITY

Continence pads available through BrightSky Australia are listed in 7 categories (A to G) based on their absorbency or 'working capacity', with

A representing the lowest working capacity and G representing the highest working capacity.

Continence pads vary as to their absorbency or 'capacity'. The absorbency of a product can be described in two ways; 'total capacity' and 'working capacity'.

Total capacity is the total volume of urine that a pad can absorb under laboratory conditions. Working capacity is the volume of urine that a pad holds when being worn by a person.

Product categories on the BrightSky Australia PadNavigator® 2.0 are based on estimated working capacities (WC). Where this information was not available at the time of printing, BrightSky Australia has estimated the working capacity as 60% of the total capacity as is industry practice.

TYPES AND SIZES OF PADS

Three main types of continence pads are referred to as:

- Pads
- Pull-Up Style (also known as 'pant style')
- All-In-One Style (also known as 'nappy style')

Pull-Ups and All-In-Ones are categorised according to waist size or weight (for children's nappies).

Pads are not categorised according to size in this guide, although the actual size and shape of a Pad may also vary. This will depend on its capacity and the material which it is made from.

How to find the right continence pad with PadNavigator® 2.0

PadNavigator® 2.0 helps you find the right continence pad when a disposable absorbent product has been recommended following a continence assessment. Continence pads vary as to their absorbency (capacity)*. Follow the 4 Easy Steps below to identify the products that best meet the capacity and size requirements of the person.

Step 1 Define the category that best describes the amount of leakage.

What best describes the volume of urinary leakage that the pad must hold over a 6-8 hour period? Is it...

Category

Step 2 Turn the wheel (on PadNavigator selection tool) to the corresponding category.

Step 3 To choose the size, measure the waist. If waist is under 40cm, choose product according to weight.

Step 4 Refer to the BrightSky Selection Guide to select a Pull-Up, All-In-One or Pad.

NOTE:

The absorbency of a product can be described in two ways – total capacity and working capacity.

Total capacity – the total volume of urine that a pad can absorb under laboratory conditions and as advised by the manufacturer.

Working capacity – the volume of urine that a pad holds when being worn by a person.

Product categories on the wheel are based on estimated working capacity. Please refer to the BrightSky Selection Guide for more information.

A continence assessment conducted by a continence advisor or urologist will help identify the most appropriate continence management plan for an individual.

Helpful Tips

The following tips may help you decide what type of continence aid to use as well as the level of capacity that may be required, depending on individual requirements.

Generally, about two to three continence pads should be used during the day and one pad during the night. This provides a good balance between comfort, protection, personal care and economic usage.

The choice of a Pad, Pull-Up or All-In-One is a question of personal preference and ease of use.

Mobility

Consider the level of physical activity that the person performs as it may increase the amount of leakage, resulting in an increase in the number of product changes.

Wear time and duration

How long will the product be worn? Is the product used during the day or night? Generally a product will need to be changed 2-3 times throughout the day. A more absorbent product may be required at night. If a person is using more than 3-4 pads over a 24 hour period a more absorbent product should be considered. Poor skin integrity may result from inadequate absorbency, so look for signs of skin irritation, such as redness, rash and discomfort.

Enhanced fitting

If wearing a pad, ensure that the placement of the product is secure (stretch underwear is available for this purpose). Pull-Up and All-In-One products should fit snugly around the waist and legs or leakage may occur (leg and waist measurements are important).

Gender specific product

Gender specific products are contoured to fit male or female body types with the absorbent area tailored to the anatomy of men and women.

Faecal incontinence

For faecal smearing, a charcoal pad may help reduce odour or a category A product can be used. For increased volume of faeces, a secondary removable absorption layer may be used in conjunction with a primary continence absorption product.

When dealing with faecal continence, it is important to use a well-fitted continence absorption product to prevent side leakage.

For continence absorption products dedicated to the management of faecal incontinence, refer to the Appendix of this guide.
